Thy mission little book is this :
Let each familiar face, each pictured spot,
We used to love so well in days gone by,
Recall our thoughts to college friends and joys.
Let mem'ry do the rest. How well doth she supply
The well-loved voice, a smile thou dost not show !
And hark ! The ringing of the chapel bell
In fancy calls us back to work again.

RECOLLECTIONS.

On the morning of September 13th, 1898, in response to the college bell, some eighty odd new students could be seen making their way towards the chapel. When the bell had ceased tolling, the seats long dedicated to the Freshmen, had been filled, and 1902 was about to take part in her first chapel exercise. This she did in a creditable manner, and even the jealous Sophomore across the aisle could be heard to whisper: "There's some good material there."

The first social event in which we were given a chance to make the acquaintance of the other classes was at the reception given us in the gymnasium by the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A. Here we had an opportunity to meet the faculty, the upper class men, and each other, and incidentally a chance to display our greenness. We all returned to our rooms well pleased and thankful it had occurred for more than one reason; for "Johnny" had already proved our friend, and on the morrow there would be no Greek, but instead, one of those kind talks which will live in our memory inspiring us to better effort long after the Greek has been forgotten.

Already there had been much talk as to our prospects in the struggle which we knew must soon come between us and the "Sophs" for honors on the diamond. The challenge had been posted and promptly accepted, and on the first Saturday of the term we marched in a body to Lee Park, and, having taken our position on the grand stand, there endeavored to cheer our boys, as yet scarcely acquainted, on to victory. Fortune, however, looked not on us with a smiling face, and in spite of a most plucky game, we lost. This defeat was no disgrace, however. And then, had not "Johnny" taken a whole period to tell us that it was better that the Freshmen should not win? Not content with one victory, but desiring to win new laurels, some adventurous spirit in 1901 threw a silk hat into the crowd, the challenge for a rush. The challenge was accepted. When the smoke of battle had cleared away 1902 was seen to be the victor, and today one of the most cherished possessions of some 1902 man is a battered silk hat.

Early in the term Professor Stanton took us on our first class ride out to Sabattus Pond. Here we had a most enjoyable time exploring the pond in the little steam launch and partaking of a most welcomed picnic dinner,

We also enjoyed a short stroll with Professor Stanton in search of birds; but the feathered tribe seemed to have no inclination to make friends with the noisy Freshmen. In the early evening we made our way back to Lewiston well satisfied with the success of our first ride together.

Hallowe'en was most pleasantly spent at Miss Allen's in Auburn. Some of the most entertaining of ghost stories were told, and about midnight the party broke up after what all agreed to have been an enjoyable evening. A few wished to remain longer but the majority thought that the "10.30" rule should be respected. 1902 was resolved to begin right.

Our football team of this year was especially strong, winning nearly every game. Our last game was with Bowdoin at Lewiston. On November 6th we all marched to Lee Park and tried by the judicious use of our lungs to give as much encouragement to the boys as possible. The game was hotly contested but resulted, much to the satisfaction of us all, in a victory for Bates, score 6—0. There was no one who took part in the celebration in the evening with more zeal than did 1902, and, indeed, who had a better right, for did not Moody, Childs and Fowler all play on the team, and had not the papers all mentioned the wonderful "feet(s)" of Childs?

This term was remarkable for its unusually large number of "sudden showers" and a great many of us who were so thoughtless as to wander in the immediate vicinity of Parker Hall were caught out "unprepared."

The last few weeks of the term were spent in "plugging" for tests (after all we were only Freshmen). How we dreaded to be initiated into the mysteries of exams. "Joke" made it easy for us, however, by giving "prelims." But test week came finally to an end as all weeks must. Most of 1902 went home for the vacation, only a few teaching. The first term of college was over and when we again met in the chapel it was as friends, not strangers.

The first week of the winter term found most of us here. We soon formed a close friendship with the "gym." Here we smoothed off angles and "got limbered up," and to prove this we sent a squad of men to represent us at City Hall in the athletic exhibition. Although we were beaten in the contest, yet 1901 had a close second in the little Freshmen.

At the close of this term 1902 suffered the loss of Mr. Fowler, one of her best athletes, who was obliged to leave college for a time.

After a short recess we were back for the summer term. The 'varsity baseball team had been chosen, 1902 doing her part by furnishing Daicey, Deane and Clason, three of its best players.

The new athletic field was being put into shape. Owing to the rivalry between the other classes, the post holes were dug and the other work completed before 1902's turn came, and consequently we were not called upon to show our skill with pick and shovel. Perhaps it was just as well for the reputation of the upper classes that we did not. Although the boys had not actually worked, they had been anticipating it several days, and the girls appreciating how wearing this must be, gave them a party in the society rooms of Hathorn Hall. Early in the evening 1901, evidently having forgotten about "that good material," were seen to be evincing a very restless spirit. At the specified time the most of us had gathered at the society rooms and proceeded to have a good time with the usual 1902 spirit, undisturbed by the frequent hollooings which came from the warriors of 1901 as they assembled on the campus without. Some of the girls who were a little late in arriving found the entrance doors of the Hall securely barred. Undismayed, they went in search of weapons, soon returning armed with a case knife, which was never meant to cut tough stake. With this they began to saw valiantly at the rope, and even succeeded in securing fifteen or twenty feet of it, which they bore in triumph up to the society room, where they proudly displayed their spoils. In order that this exploit might be assured of a place in the history of the class, both rope and case-knife were given a prominent position in the picture which was taken as a memento of the occasion.

Anticipating trouble on our way home, the boys were requested to leave their ladies and gird themselves for battle. By some this hardship was thought to be more severe than circumstances warranted, and it is quite probable that a few might even have broken out in open mutiny had not the girls shown their class spirit and assured them that for the sake of the class they would look after themselves "just this once." In battle array we started down the chapel steps. All was quiet as we emerged upon the campus. Down the walk we went, yet no enemy appeared. We were beginning to think that our fears, or rather our hopes, had been groundless, when suddenly the "tiger," "tiger" of 1901 sounded. It was promptly answered by "boomra," "boomra" of 1902. Figures were seen moving rapidly in the darkness and we realized in an instant that 1901 was trying to "rope us in." We seized the rope and started quickly down the walk dragging 1901 after us. Our rapid advance, however, was soon stopped. We wavered back and forth. The real rush had begun. Little by little we progressed down College Street, and amid the most deafening shouts. The streets were soon lined with upper-class men shouting encouragement to the combatants. Wondering faces appeared at the windows thinking kind tho'ts, no doubt, of these noisy college students who had aroused them from their slumbers. Inch by inch, foot by foot, we advanced, wondering if Sabattus Street, the goal set by the upper-class men, would ever be reached. Now we were down and being trampled on by the line, unable to move until all had passed over us. Now we were engaged in bitter strife with one of our own men, whom we had mistaken for the foe in the darkness, but at no time were we idle. At last we reached the goal and the rope was awarded us as victors. 1901 had learned a lesson which she forgot not. In the picture which was taken of the victors the hat captured in our first rush did good service.

In the latter part of the term Professor Stanton took us on a bird walk out to Lake Grove. Leaving the cars at the Grove, we walked to Mt. Gile and thence to the fish hatchery. On our way back to the Grove we stopped at a farm house where we enjoyed a feast worthy of the prodigal's return. Indeed it did bring back the wanderers, for a few (the number was even) "who'd got separated from the crowd," now made their appearance.

In our Sophomore year we endeavored to begin right by making friends with the Freshmen as soon as possible. No complaints of our being unneighborly were heard. We also had reason to feel flattered from the lively interest the faculty took in us. Our number was also increased by several members from 1901, who had shown their wisdom by staying out a year and returning with 1902.

In the Sophomore-Freshman baseball game of this year we easily defeated 1903 by a score of 18—7. In the latter part of the game, especially, the Freshmen showed great skill in dodging the ball. It was rumored that they had acquired this art of "dodging" by a week's hard practice in making their entrance and exit to Parker Hall. In the evening we celebrated our victory in an appropriate manner at the home of Miss Day in Auburn.

Hallowe'en of this year was spent at the home of Miss Bangs in Sabattus. In Mr. Bolster we had an ideal chaperon; and with Hunnewell's orchestra and a large barn floor who could not enjoy playing "tucker?"

In football this year we were represented by Hunnewell and Moody. The team made a fine showing. On November 11th Bowdoin proved our Nemesis. Through the brilliant work of Hunnewell, however, Bowdowin was deprived of the satisfaction of saying that Bates had not scored on her.

When we returned for the winter term we found that our number had been limited. The faculty, with our interests ever at heart, decided that some of our class mates who had been especially industrious need a longer rest than the customary four weeks, and consequently we were not all together again until late in the term.

When we did finally arrive we began our work in the "gym" with a determination to win the drill if possible. Our efforts were crowned with success, although in 1901 we had a worthy rival.

During the first week of the Spring term we delivered our debates and were thereby relieved of a burden which had been hanging like a mill stone about our necks.

Botany was one of the subjects which we studied during this term, and in collecting specimens for our herbarium we made many pleasant trips into the surrounding country. Professor Leonard took the class on one of these trips out to Lake Grove, with which we were very well acquainted from our ride of the previous year. However, we had a very pleasant time and returned with many specimens.

At the opening of our junior year we came back with a sense of responsibility, revelling in the new powers that were ours. Now, it was our place to advise, teach, and protect the coming class—1904. Gladly did we assume our duties in preparing for the annual Freshman-Sophomore ball game. On the eventful Saturday we, escorted by a drum corps, headed the procession which, after executing various figures on the campus, took up its position on the grand stand with the anxious Freshmen, beside the wicked, expectant Sophs. In spite of all our vocal aid the Freshmen lost.

As the time for class rides approached the juniors decided to make a barge trip to Poland Springs. Accordingly at chapel time we started in two overflowing four-horse barges. We arrived safely, after having walked up several hills, at the farm house where we were to take dinner. The more fortunate enjoyed the gentle ripple of the waves, two by two, in the softly cushioned boats which the keeper pushed in, and the less favored ones, too, were not deprived of the undulating motion, for the boatman became their pilot.

The afternoon was spent in visiting the different buildings. The "Maine" building from the World's Fair being most attractive. As the shades of evening were falling, dark forms alighted from covered vehicles and made their way to the spring house where the clear, cool water gushed forth. At one end of the house was the bottling room filled with its long rows of green bottles labeled "Poland Spring Water." As these dark forms re-entered the barges, curious green bottles filled the hands of some. The ride home was dark and long, but our spirits took flight in song and the air was filled with the sonorous notes of college songs.

Our only class party of the year was held in the Polymnian and Eurosophian Society rooms together with the adjoining recitation rooms. Here we frolicked to our hearts' content. Blind man's buff and fortune-telling, with punch, cider, crackers, confectionery and salted peanuts sprinkled in, made up the evening's program. Tubs of water with floating apples, with an occasional wetting, added to the merrymaking.

The fall days went swiftly by, and exams were staring us in the face. We trembled when we thought of the Shakespeare exam under "Money." It was our first experience under our highly respected, but rather feared professor. Previous classes had told us what terrible experiences they had passed through. We met on the field of battle at eight o'clock and for four mortal hours we fought with pencil and eraser, coming off victorious, without the loss of a member or a standard, and only a few slight scratches.

The football season had been a successful one. Only one feature was lacking. Bowdoin had sent up her terms and after several meetings we decided to no longer humble ourselves before the "friends by the murmuring pines" and boldly told them on just what conditions we would play the game, which they refused.

The winter term opened with hard work which was kept up during the term. We wrote essays, studied chemistry, went to Freshman "Decs," did fancy steps, fencing and broad sword exercise in the "gym," and learned from Dryden how

> "Great wits are sure to madness near allied
> And their partitions do their bounds divide."

The one event for the girls in the junior year was the "Last Gym," when we celebrated the close of physical exercise by spending an afternoon in the "gym," going through all the exercises prescribed, and improvising as occasion demanded. As a reward of all our feats we were allowed to help ourselves to pickles, cocoanut cakes and sweets of several descriptions.

Baseball, tennis, track athletics, junior parts and the routine of daily recitations and flunks occupied our time during the summer term. The program was varied occasionally by star-gazing walks, for Professor Clark had told us we must know, by the close of the term, at least twenty heavenly bodies.

Good work was done by the baseball team and all were highly elated by the score: Bates 10; Tufts 7. Again when Columbia consented to play with us, we only dared hope we might at least make a good showing. Imagine our surprise when the old bell on Hathorn Hall rung out the score—one, two, three, four, five—then an ominous silence, telling us we had not only played well, but had not even allowed the blue to score on the garnet.

The latter part of the spring term as juniors we were saddened by the news of Miss Bangs' death. The first half of her college course had been finished with the class, and she was out teaching when the Great Teacher above called her home.

As the time for junior parts drew near we were given three days in which to evolve from brains and books an original part. Our committee, consisting of Dr. Geer, Professor Purrinton and Professor Anthony, kindly listened to the finished productions one afternoon and evening. About eleven o'clock posting a list of the "put-overs" together with the best essayist. Some of us, anxious to know who the best writers were (for this was our first trial) spent the lingering hours from nine to eleven around Hathorn Hall watching the moon, playing games and speculating what could be keeping the judges so long. At last the form of Dr. Geer was seen hurrying down the diagonal. Then we knew our fate was decided. The twelve chosen ones did credit to the class as they each gave their orations Monday night of commencement week.

June 10th will be a day long remembered by the class. For it was on this beautiful summer day that 1902 went to Squirrel Island. Collecting at the Lower Main Station we bought tickets for Bath. There we took the steamer "Nahanant." Down the river we went in the fresh, cool breeze. Dr. Geer was our chaperon. On our arrival we started out to buy lobsters but were unsuccessful, only getting three—all the island afforded. Our spirits were not to be dampened by this, however, so we went our ways catching jelly fish, picking shells and reaching arm's length into the water to pull starfishes from their homes.

As noon approached we came from all sides of the island to the cottage whose piazza was to serve as both dining room and table. Some preferred shady places by the swelling tide, others liked the mossy woods. Thus instead of our picnic dinner there were several family gatherings with invited guests.

When the whistle blew, announcing the departure of the boat, the wandering lambs came back from their gambols, and probably there was not a hair of the "Squirrel" which some member of the class had not seen or touched.

The class, in considering what gift they might make to the college, finally decided to "take the chapel in hand." The walls were painted, the ceiling frescoed, new gas and electric light fixtures were put in, a new hard-wood stage took the place of the creaky loose boards, and the seats lost their old defaced appearance by vigorous scrapings and a new coat of paint and varnish; and much to the sorrow of some, the holes in the chapel doors were no longer to be found, no longer could the prying eyes gaze unbeknown on the dignified professor with the trembling Freshman vainly trying to make "graceful gestures."

As a reminder of this gift, to all who enter this consecrated room there stands over the doors the sentinel 1902.

The Juniors first began to feel their importance when the perfect days of June not only suggested roses, but ivy also. Ivy day, the great day of the year for 1902, was close at hand. We began to realize how soon we too, like the Seniors, instead of practicing marching for Ivy day, would be marching for the last time in and out of those beloved doors. Days went swiftly by and as the days grew longer, so too grew our hours of marching. Marshall Donnocker drilled us so thoroughly that when we came to have our full-dress rehearsal not even the boys "got out of step" though they did have to hold up their "skirts."

Tuesday, June 18th, each member of the class put a bit of earth around the tender roots, signifying that, fed by all, it should grow up into a living monument, climbing higher and higher as our hopes and ideals attained a higher place.

As Seniors we saw Moody for the second time assume command of the football team. Merry was manager. Under such leaders, and with such men as Hamlin, Childs, Blake and the underclass men in the ranks defeat was impossible. A game was arranged with Harvard. Here the touchdown made by Blake gave the phenomenal score of 16—6. Well had the boys done, and gladly did the old bell ring out the news. We had scored on Harvard. The Boston papers had great head lines telling of the little unknown Maine college which had scored on the great university. Bates was rapidly pushing her name forward.

The football season closed November 9th by a pyramid of burning tar barrels on Mt. David in celebration of our glorious victory over our old antagonist, Bowdoin. 11—0 was the score.

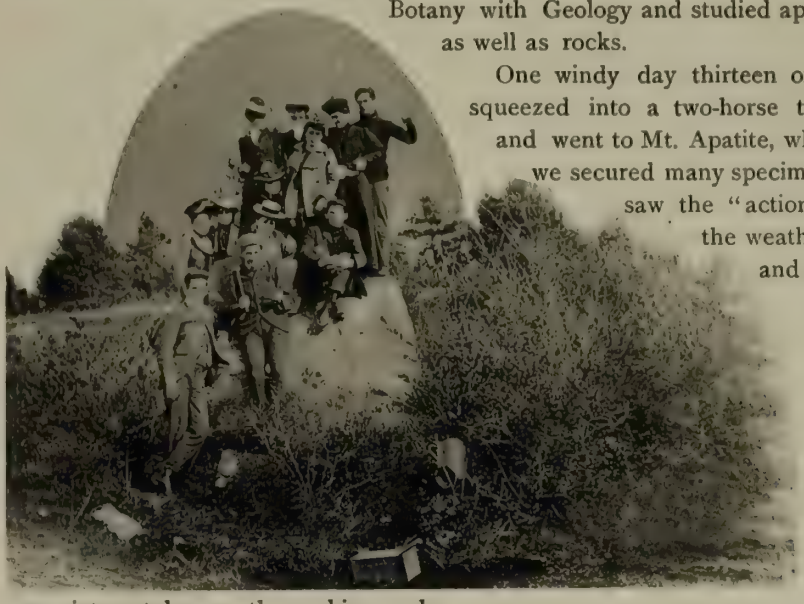
To Professor Clark we owe the pleasure of many a geology walk and ride. One afternoon we took a walk of about nine miles. We combined Botany with Geology and studied apples as well as rocks.



One windy day thirteen of us squeezed into a two-horse team and went to Mt. Apatite, where we secured many specimens, saw the "action of the weather" and had our picture taken on the rocking rock.

For the second time our Hallowe'en party was held in the upper story of Hathorn Hall. The refreshments were in charge of Miss Wheeler, Felker and Miss Allen. At the beginning of the evening a notice of "No admittance" was pinned on the door of "Johnnie's" room, and when we tried to force an entrance we were vigorously repulsed. Later in the evening we were invited to enter the sacred precincts, and there a surprise truly awaited us; tables bountifully loaded with cake and creamed apple pie, with "fruit lemonade" or "new cider."

After refreshing ourselves on this repast the toast master called for speeches, to which all heartily responded. As the hour for departure arrived many were the expressions of pleasure and sadness. Pleasure at having spent so enjoyable an evening together, but sadness because it was our last Hallowe'en.

With the closing of the year 1901 the duties of 1902 as managers and editors ceased. Faithfully and well had they done their duty, and now they gladly surrendered the Student to the care and protection of 1903.

Right gladly did we welcome back Professor Hartshorn at the opening of the year 1902, after an absence of a term on account of ill-health. We had missed him sadly, and many a time was heard "I shall be glad when 'Money' gets back." With amazing earnestness we took up our English work. Some even going so far as to learn page after page in "Lounsbury's History of English Language."

During this term the great debate between Harvard and Bates came off in City Hall. The first time Harvard had consented to debate with Bates. The debate was Harvard Seniors against Bates. Childs and Hunnewell, 1902, and Beedy, 1903, presented our side of the question.

As the Harvard men began to debate we held our breath, fearing the comparisons which might be made. We soon found that there was no cause for fear, for we were in no way outclassed by the boys from Cambridge. As the judges announced their decision on that memorable 14th of February the walls of City Hall rung with rousing cheers for Bates.

At the annual athletic meet at City Hall, for the second time the Senior relay team won in competition with the other classes.

No class parties were held this term, only hard work seasoned by

Friday night recreations at society demanded our time. No time off for Senior parts, yet the judges said they were the best for years. Those chosen for the exhibition were given vacation week in which to prepare and the parts were not given until the first Friday of the summer term.

The Glee Club made a very successful trip during the vacation. It is said to be the best glee club in the State, if not in New England. 1902 was represented in both Glee and Mandolin Clubs by eight members.

The last term of our college course our studies were lessened to eleven hours a week. We found this fully sufficient with our class-meetings, essays, class-day parts and all our extra work.

Baseball, track and tennis occupied the time of many of the 1902 boys. Deane, with a year's experience as captain of the baseball team, took up his work with great energy, and through his efforts and the efficient management of "Erastus" Wall the baseball season was the most successful of any during our course.

We were kept well informed about athletics by the posters on trees and notices on the bulletin board, such as:

Notice

Batting practice at 11.00 A.M. To-day
Regular practice at 3.30 P.M.

E. J. McLean, Capt.

May 6th, 1902.

Twice have the marriage bells pealed during our Senior year. Once at the beginning of the year when Foss, 1902, and Miss Felker, 1903, went to the altar. The last time on March 5th, 1902, when Miss Gosline became Mrs. Wilson. During the three years she had been with us Miss Gosline had won by her sympathetic and kindly nature the respect and honor of all who knew her. She was one of the most prominent girls both in college and association work. Her lovable Christian character particularly fitted her for the place she now fills as wife of Rev. J. E. Wilson.

Thus have four years passed swiftly by. Now must we part; but the ties which our years of association at Bates have formed time will not sever. We must go forth to battle with the world, but we go forth united —still the Class of 1902.
